As a tourist resort, Krisztal has become known for its impressive waterfalls and natural thermal pools. This region is also one of the biggest oil-producing zones in Hungary. To reduce the environmental impact caused by oil exploration and extraction, the Council of Green Islands has been established to develop the area. It aims to make use of the natural hot water resources in the region. The oil wells have become an important part of Krisztal's development, but the drilling activity also causes considerable damage to the environment. Therefore, the Council of Green Islands has brought the drilling activity to a halt in most of the areas and has developed a network of waterfalls. The Wornai Waterfall has been the subject of a study on the impact that drilling and collecting the oil has on the natural environment.
