ShowCommandLine DeleteCommandLine HideEditbox Hiding the edit box causes the edit field to disappear. The edit box can be re-shown by double-clicking the edit field. If you want to control from a separate program (with a separate thread) you need to use the SendMessage() command. However, this is not a recommended way of doing it. You should use the ShowMessage() command instead, which allows you to use the functionality of your other program from the control. While you use the CSCN_DESTROYEDIT control, the control also cleans up all the UI in the control by clearing out its list and removing any items. This property is used to send a WM_COMMAND message to the specified control. By default, the control's ID is 0. This property allows you to change the send and cancel message IDs for the control. This property is used when your control is a child control of another control, such as a button. The control's ID is in the first four bytes of the param structure and is automatically adjusted if this property is set. By default, the control's ID is 0. Example Private Sub UserControl_GotFocus(sender As Object, e As System.EventArgs) Handles Me.GotFocus Me.SendMessage(Me.CSCN_DELAY, -1000, 0, Nothing) Me.CancelEdit() End Sub You can use the SetWindowLongPtr() function to set the font of your control to match the font of the other program. However, if you want to change the font of the entire application, you should use the SetClassLongPtr() function instead.
